not have that. So we have a real document against just rhetoric, and it is making for an unbalanced debate.

I think if we can get the Members at the other end of this building, as well as the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue in the White House, to in fact give us some documents, we would have the basis about which we could sit in a room and combine them and merge them and work out the differences, as we do regularly and is our job.

I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BURR of North Carolina. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, it is one thing to talk about catastrophic coverage, which is the ability to look at the senior population and say the one thing that we can do is put the Federal Government where it should have been in health care, the safety net, and assure our seniors that if they ever spend out of pocket a certain amount of money in a given year that they will never be exposed for any more than a fixed amount, catastrophic coverage, a limit. It is one thing to talk about it; it is another thing to put it on paper and to pass the test of the Congressional Budget Office or the Office of Management and Budget and have that number scored. But we did it. We did it and we lived within the framework of the available money, and we provided a stop loss for seniors of $6,000.

The President had a bunch of pieces of a plan, and he said he would like to incorporate stop loss or catastrophic loss, but the fact is that he could never do it in a way that he could put it on paper and have that paper scored because of the way he proposed designing the original plan, which was no choice, which got very little discount from the current price of pharmaceuticals in the marketplace.

The Congressional Budget Office looked at our approach and said that because we had competition, because we had provided seniors and the disabled choice in the plans that they could choose from, we will achieve at least a 25 percent discount across the board for things that are insurance-based purchased and for things that are purchased out of pocket, a 25 percent savings just by creating choice that the administration does not get with their proposal.

Mr. GREENWOOD. And if I may, that is before we even apply the Federal contribution to the actual price of the item. So that 75 is cut in half. And, of course, we pay 100 percent of the remainder for the low-income and for middle-class folks, a half. So now we are talking about going from paying 100 percent of retail price to paying 37½ percent of retail price. It is almost a two-thirds reduction in the cost of the pharmaceutical product to the average American.

Mr. BURR of North Carolina. If there existed truth in advertising on this we would have stars all across this plan because it provides at every level what seniors want.

Before the gentleman mentioned employers, I had written the word employers on a piece of paper up here because that was one of the biggest challenges that our whole task force had. There is a segment of America, a large percentage of America that are seniors today that are currently provided prescription drugs as a benefit of their retirement. As we see prices go up 11 or 12 percent a year, the question we have to look out and ask is how long will they continue to offer that benefit. Because they are not obligated to, it is just a commitment that they made when individuals retired.

We found a way to incorporate into our plan that those employers that provide that benefit, once those individuals reached that stop-loss amount, they would be covered under the Federal stop loss, a great incentive for employers to continue to provide that first dollar coverage for the millions of seniors that are currently under their health plans. We found the approach to keep the employer engaged.

We found a way to incorporate the catastrophic or the stop loss into their plan without dislocating them, which made our plan totally voluntary to every eligible person regardless of where they currently had their coverage, if they did. They could stick with that and still utilize that stop-loss protection of the national plan.

Clearly, we spent a lot of time on that, making sure that we got it right. But the fact that it was voluntary, the fact that for those that chose to participate there was choice, the fact that everybody, whether they were in their employer plan or chose one of the accredited plans by that new entity that ran the prescription drug benefit, all of them benefited from an annual stop-loss amount that protected every senior and made sure that they could not lose everything that they had accumulated because they had run into a health care problem that required unusual pharmaceutical costs.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I believe our time has just about elapsed. I want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina for his participation, as well as my other colleagues from around the country.

This clearly is, if not the number one issue in America, certainly ought to be. There is still time to resolve this issue. All we need to do is to work with the House and the Senate and the President together and, in fact, we can all be proud of meeting a need that just cries out to be met; and we think we have made a good start.

HEALTH CARE ISSUES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GANSKE. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak on several issues related to health care this afternoon. As my colleagues know, before I came to Congress I was a physician practicing in Des Moines, Iowa. I do have some insight into some of these health care issues that we are trying to tie up before the end of this session, whenever that will happen.

Let me first speak about the prescription drug problem. I just finished a series of town hall meetings around my district.

I will tell my colleagues that the high cost of prescription drugs is a real one, not just for senior citizens but for everyone, and it is a major component to the increased premiums that we are seeing for working families in terms of their health insurance premiums. Prescription drug costs for those health plans are going up 18 to 20 percent per year, and then those costs are being transferred on to the businesses that pay for health insurance and then on to increased premiums for the family. So it is not senior citizens. But from my town hall meetings, I had a senior citizen in Council Bluffs come up to me and tell me that between his wife's drug costs and his drug costs, they were spending almost $13,000 a year on prescription drugs. They were by no means a wealthy family. I had another gentleman in Atlantic, Iowa come up to me and he had a whole packet of his prescription drug costs. They amounted to almost $7,000 a year.

Now, it is true there is a certain percentage of senior citizens who are fortunate, who are healthy, who do not have any drug costs. That is about 14 percent of the Medicare population. And about 36 percent have less than $500 out of pocket. But there is a group of senior citizens that have very high drug costs. We need to address that problem.

As a Republican, I just have to offer a polite voice of dissent, because the plan that passed this House is simply not going to work. It relies heavily on
